Mission & Impact

Statements

Mission

At Nashville Conflict Resolution Center (NCRC), we empower vulnerable participants to resolve their issues through mediation, establishing sustainable solutions that restore stability to our clients, strengthen fragile communities, and save millions in taxpayer dollars.

Background

NCRC was founded in August of 2000 when members of the Nashville Bar Association desired to provide mediation in General Sessions Civil Court cases for parties who could not afford legal representation. Today, NCRC's restorative mediation programs focus on housing security, parenting stability, and ending the prison pipeline. A cohort of about 60 trained mediators volunteer their skills and time to serve a population that struggles disproportionately with poverty, incarceration, violence, and the chronic mental and health challenges that are produced by poverty.

Additionally, NCRC provides Tennessee Supreme Court-approved mediation training, continuing education and mentoring for volunteer mediators, and numerous conflict resolution workshops for communities and nonprofit partners.

Impact

Highlights of 2017:

NCRC accepted 844 requests for mediation.

NCRC mediated 652 cases for the courts, public housing, select schools, and individuals in need.

We served over 1700 participants through mediation and conflict resolution programs.

Our volunteer mediators donated 1361 hours of professional service in mediation sessions.

Our resolved cases saved Davidson County taxpayers over $3 million dollars in court expenses. Our mediations also prevented evictions and homelessness, protecting taxpayers from additional costs.

Goals for 2018:

We will begin to provide mediation services to the Metro Nashville Police Department in order to address citizen complaints of unfair or hurtful treatment.

We intend to expand our long-term impact tracking.

With sufficient funding, we will expand our staff and offer more regular services to counties surrounding Davidson.

Needs

NCRC's most pressing needs include the following:

- More volunteers willing to undergo training and commit to mediating twice per month during the work week;
- An increase in general support that will allow the hire of additional staff to coordinate and train volunteers and to help with development and donations;
- A capital donation in the form of property along one of the major bus corridors (eg, Charlotte, Nolensville, or Gallatin Road), where NCRC can provide mediation services at a higher volume to clients reliant on public transportation;
- Partnership with an individual or firm bringing expertise in the translation of data to compelling, graphical storytelling.

Board Chair Statement

CEO Statement

By helping one person, we can help an entire community. NCRC invests on average $200 for each child, parent, or other vulnerable participant in Nashville who needs help to resolve an escalating crisis with dignity and accountability.

For many of our clients, this gift proves to be the opportunity of a lifetime.

It seems so simple: restorative mediation instead of violence, instead of legal entanglement, instead of incarceration. $200 opens this door for one individual in need. Our approach fosters resiliency and accountability in our clients, who gain communication skills and a restored faith in their ability to make a -valuable contribution to the lives around them. The mediation process allows them to restore family, housing, and community stability in a way that is lasting and impactful.

Programs

Programs

Restorative Mediation

Description

We work with adults and juvenile offenders to help them de-escalate conflict, acknowledge responsibility for their actions, offer apologies, identify appropriate restitution, and create action plans. Most cases are referred to us through the: District Attorney's Warrant Screening program; Juvenile Court; Police Department's Youth Services Division; public schools; and public housing properties.

Short Term Success

NCRC uses a day-of-service survey to measure short-term success. Participants answer a set of questions that provide demographic data, an indication of stress levels at the outset vs at the end of mediation, and an indication of satisfaction with several elements of the mediation process.

We determine the program to be successful if:

85% of mediations end in an agreement.

80% of participants indicate in the survey that mediation helped them share their views. This indicates that the individuals felt "heard," which is a key factor in promoting effective communication and reducing stress.

70% of participants indicate that mediation helped them better understand the other person's point of view. This indicates a shift from oppositional positioning to empathetic communication, which improves relationships and reduces stress.

85% of participants indicate that the mediator listened to their feelings and concerns, confirming that our training in compassionate communication is effective.

90% of cases that involve juvenile offenders are successfully diverted from the court system.

Family Mediation

Description	This program, devoted to parenting and family stability, serves parents and guardians who have reached an impasse regarding custody and visitation issues. Often these cases come through the Juvenile Court, and the households may include children who themselves are at risk of entering the juvenile justice system.
Budget	137,000
Category	Human Services, General/Other Parenting Education
Population Served	At-Risk Populations, Families, Poor, Economically Disadvantaged, Indigent
Short Term Success	Short term success includes participant satisfaction with the mediation process, documented by the agreement reached and the exit survey; participant satisfaction regarding the mediator's level of fairness; participant level of security in feeling heard by the mediator and, to varying extend, by the other party; and the success rate in reaching an agreement so the case does not have to be heard in court.
Long term Success	Long term success is indicated by: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. the sustainability of the agreement reached by parents and guardians2. the ability of parents and guardians to work out further disagreements without legal intervention, because they acquired conflict resolution skills in mediation and because they absorbed the parenting education lessons on the negative impact of conflict upon children
Program Success Monitored By	Success is monitored by: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. statistics on percentages of cases resolved with an agreement reached by the parties;2. an exit evaluation filled out by all participants, who respond to the following statements: "I was able to share my views and concerns," "I learned more about the other person's views and concerns," "I think the other person learned about my thoughts and concerns," "I feel like the mediator listened to my feelings and concerns," "My mediation resolved some or all of the issues that brought me here," and "I would recommend or use this service again in the future."

Housing Security and Civil Mediation

Description	Our cases usually involve escalating conflicts with neighbors, landlords, or tenants, including payment or possession issues. Cases are referred to us through General Sessions Court; MDHA; and individual request. Mediation provides participants a means of resolving issues and avoiding eviction and homelessness.

Conflict Management Education

Description	NCRC provides conflict management workshops for Nashville nonprofits and community partners, including both staff and their population served, in order to foster healthier communities.
Budget	20000
Category	Community Development, General/Other Neighborhood Revitalization
Population Served	At-Risk Populations, Poor, Economically Disadvantaged, Indigent, Unemployed, Underemployed, Dislocated
Program Success Monitored By	To measure short-term outcomes, NCRC will administer an evaluation immediately following each mediation session to gauge participants' satisfaction. Participants will be asked to select "strongly agree," "agree," "no opinion," "disagree" or "strongly disagree" in relation to each of these 6 statements: "I was able to share my views and concerns," "I learned more about the other person's views," "I think the other person learned about my views," "I feel like the mediator listened to my feelings and concerns," "My mediation resolved some or all of the issues that brought me here," and "I would recommend or use this service again in the future." To measure long-term outcomes, NCRC will conduct a voluntary study for total of 200 participants at the beginning of mediation and 6 months following mediation, using a 14 question Acrimony Scale and a modified Client Assessment of Mediations Satisfaction scale.

CEO Comments

As Nashville continues to make national news with its vibrant opportunities and cultural riches, the needs of our under-served population grow apace. In the current year (2018), NCRC will receive increased referrals from partner high schools and the Juvenile Court as a front-line strategy in reducing youth violence and the prison pipeline. We will also receive increased referrals from MDHA (public housing) in recognition of mediation's effectiveness in de-escalating conflict, preventing eviction, and reducing subsequent homelessness.

In order to meet these projected increases, NCRC is embarking on the design of a new strategic plan. We recognize that we will have to expand our staff, find more efficient ways to manage our volunteers, and increase our funding base. We are also working closely with numerous community partners that share a common target population in order to increase our collective impact.
